5 THINGS TO KNOW

WELCOME TO METRO BOSTON

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT, REPORTER

We've all seen students across the country getting more politically involved lately, even if they're technically not even old enough to vote. One of the areas they've been focusing on is gun laws, from March for Our Lives to marches against the NRA, in the wake of the Parkland shooting. Student activists have literally stepped up to raise awareness on this issue, and soon, they'll do so once again with the 50 Miles More Massachusetts march. Activists will march right up to the Smith & Wesson headquarters in Springfield. Here more about why right from one of the organizers inside and at metroboston.us.

1 FORMER UN CHIEF KOFI ANNAN DIES AT 80

Former U.N. Secretary-General and Nobel Peace Prize laureate Kofi Annan died on Saturday at the age of 80, his foundation said, after decades of championing efforts to try to end protracted conflicts in Africa, Asia and the Middle East. Annan, a Ghanaian national, died in hospital in Bern, Switzerland, in the early hours, his close associates said. In Geneva, the Kofi Annan Foundation announced his peaceful death after a short undisclosed illness with "immense sadness", saying he was surrounded in his last days by his second wife Nane and children Ama, Kojo and Nina. After rising through the ranks of the United Nations, Annan served two terms as U.N. Secretary-General in New York from 1997-2006 and retired to live in a Swiss village in the Geneva countryside. His 10-year-old foundation promotes good governance and the transformation of African agriculture. "In many ways, Kofi Annan was the United Nations. He rose through the ranks to lead the organization into the new millennium with matchless dignity and determination," U.N. Secretary-General Antonio Guterres said.

2 TRUMP: 'NOTHING TO HIDE' FROM MUELLER

President Donald Trump said on Sunday he had "nothing to hide" from the special counsel investigating Russian interference in the 2016 U.S. election, and denied that his top lawyer had turned on him by cooperating with the probe. Trump, in a series of tweets, denounced the New York Times for a Saturday story saying White House Counsel Don McGahn has cooperated extensively with the special counsel, Robert Mueller. The Times said McGahn had shared detailed accounts about the episodes at the heart of the inquiry into whether Trump obstructed justice. "I allowed him and all others to testify — I didn't have to," Trump said in a tweet. Trump said the newspaper made it seem like McGahn had turned on the president — as White House counsel John Dean had in the Watergate investigation of former President Richard Nixon - "when in fact it is just the opposite." As White House counsel since the beginning of the Trump administration, McGahn could have rare insight into the president's thinking.

3 KOREAN FAMILIES TO REUNITE DECADES SINCE THE WAR

Lee Choon-Ja, 88, holds photo of her South Korean hudsband (give to her North Korean relatives during the reunion) the day before departing for North Korea for a family reunion at a hotel used as a gathering point, in Sokcho, near the Demilitarized Zone (DMZ) on Sunday in Sokcho, South Korea. Almost a hundred South Koreans will meet their families for the first time since separated by the Korean War decades ago, during a family reunion at North Korea this month. A total of 88 people from North Korea will also receive a chance to meet their families in the South during the six-day event which starts on August 20 at Mount Kumgang, north of the border between North and South Korea.

4 OK STORM INJURES 14, CANCELS BOY BAND SHOW

An outdoor concert in Oklahoma featuring 90s boy band favorites Backstreet Boys and 98 Degrees was canceled on Saturday after an intense storm struck the area and injured at least 14 people, venue officials said. "We never want to put our fans in harm's way and with tonight's weather and the injuries from earlier, we have decided to cancel the show and will attempt to reschedule," the Backstreet Boys said on the band's Twitter page. Patrons at the sold-out show held at the WinStar World Casino and Resort in Thackerville, nearly 130 miles south of Oklahoma City, were asked to seek shelter at around 5 p.m. local time when lightning appeared within four miles of the casino, the resort said in a statement. About 150 people ignored the warnings and continued to wait in line for the show. "At approximately 5:30 p.m., the storm hit and knocked over the concert entrance trusses with 70 to 80 mile an hour winds and heavy rain," resort officials said in a statement. Fourteen people were treated at the scene and taken to local hospitals. Two have been released, officials said.

5 BODIES FOUND 5 DAYS AFTER BRIDGE COLLAPSE

Rescue workers found the bodies of three members of a family in the wreckage of Genoa's collapsed motorway bridge early on Sunday - the last people reported missing in the disaster, bringing the death toll to 43. The bodies were recovered from a car crushed under slabs of concrete, the Genoa prefecture said, five days after a 200-metre section of the Morandi bridge gave way in busy traffic, plunging vehicles and debris to the ground 165 feet below. Nine people are still in hospital, four in a critical condition, the prefecture added. All those listed as missing had now been accounted for, but crews would keep looking just in case, fire brigade official Stefano Zanut told Sky TG24. "We won't stop. Our work continues in order to have the full certainty that nobody has been left under the rubble," he said. Workers were also making the site secure and helping investigations to establish the cause of the disaster, he added. The viaduct was part of the A10 motorway linking the Italian port city with the French border to the west and was managed by toll-road operator Autostrade per l'Italia, a unit of infrastructure group Atlantia.

Student gun control activists to march to Smith & Wesson

As part of the 50 Miles More Massachusetts march, students will march from Worcester to the Smith & Wesson headquarters in Springfield.

Like thousands of youth across the country, Felix Brody has marched against gun violence in the wake of the Parkland, Florida, school shooting. From March for Our Lives in Boston to the March on the NRA in Virginia, he's covered a lot of ground — but he's not done yet.

This week, he'll march 50 miles more, from Worcester to the Smith & Wesson headquarters in Springfield.

Brody, a 16-year-old rising junior at Somerville High School, is one of the organizers of this march, called 50 Miles More Massachusetts. Along with a friend, he came across the national 50 Miles More organization, through which Wisconsin high schoolers marched 50 miles to U.S. House Speaker Paul Ryan's hometown to "demand he take a stronger stand on gun control," Brody said.

"[Their march] started the day after March for Our Lives, to show that March for Our Lives wasn't a one-off event, that youth are going to continue to raise their voices," he said. "A couple of days after their march, they decided to launch a 50 more in 50 states campaign, to have each state host a 50-mile march to essentially call out politicians that are sort of weak on gun control."

Massachusetts has the lowest gun death rate in the nation, according to multiple reports. Brody and other student gun control activists have noted that they're lucky here, but it's still not enough. Especially with Smith & Wesson, a leading manufacturer of guns in the United States, in their backyard. So they wanted to be a part of that 50 more movement.

"We're so grateful to be living in a state like Massachusetts where we have the lowest gun death fatality rate. We have extremely strong gun laws," Brody said. "But we have a gun manufacturer that makes weapons that are illegal in this state and exports them out of state, and that was a big issue for me."

A Massachusetts law has banned assault weapons since 1998, and Attorney General Maura Healey has continued to strengthen gun laws across the commonwealth. And yet Smith & Wesson in Springfield manufactures semi-automatic assault rifles — including the specific one used in the Parkland school shooting: a Smith & Wesson M&P 15 .223 rifle.

"Smith & Wesson is causing so much harm out of state," Brody said. While he hasn't personally been affected by gun violence, he knows his Somerville community has, and he knows communities across the country have been affected in horrifying ways.

The 50 Miles More march will kick off Aug. 23, and Brody expects they'll be walking between 10 and 18 miles a day. The student gun control activists will sleep in churches and community centers that have volunteered to help their effort and take breaks in parks.

"We're going to be doing a lot of walking, but also having a lot of fun," Brody said. "It'll be great because students from across Massachusetts, and some from out of Massachusetts, will just meeting each other and networking … forming new allies."

The most shocking moments in VMAs history

Warren Beatty's Best Picture flub at the 2017 Oscars may have been one of the more memorable moments at an awards telecast, but even with the academy's controversial move to embrace popular movies with a new category, none of it will compare to the MTV Video Music Awards.

Commonly referred to as the VMAs, MTV's own trophy-giving ceremony has been going strong since its debut in 1984. And during just about every single telecast since, the event meant to celebrate music and popular culture has never strayed too far from controversy.

Here's a short list of shocking VMA moments.

Madonna performs at inaugural ceremony

The single-named pop star wasn't the only musician to perform in 1984, but her rendition of "Like a Virgin" was by far the most talked-about. Donning a wedding dress/bustier, along with various garters and other lingerie, Madonna sang the song while standing atop a giant mock wedding cake. She then came down to the stage and writhed around on the floor, while briefly flashing the audience.

The 2018 MTV Video Music Awards will air Monday, August 20 at 8 p.m. GETTY IMAGES

Robin Thicke and Miley Cyrus get gross

It wasn't the first time Miley Cyrus would shock audiences at the VMAs, but it was surely one of the most striking. Following a performance of her song "We Can't Stop" in 2013, Robin Thicke joined Cyrus on stage for his already-controversial song "Blurred Lines." To the surprise of everyone in attendance, including Thicke, she began twerking on the singer's crotch. Between the apparent cultural appropriation and the pair's age different, it was … something.

Kanye storms the stage

In 2009, newcomer Taylor Swift took home the trophy for Best Female Video. Unfortunately for her and everyone watching, rapper Kanye West thought Beyonce should have won. So he stormed the stage, took the mic from Swift and declared: "Yo, Tay, I'm really happy for you, and Imma let you finish, but Beyonce had one of the best videos of all time!" When Beyonce later won Video of the Year, she called Swift back on stage to let her finish.

Madonna smooches Britney and Christina

Most Millennials remember where they were, or what they were doing, when Madonna returned to the 2003 VMAs for a medley of "Like a Virgin" and "Hollywood." Not so much because of Madonna herself, but because of who accompanied her: Britney Spears and Christina Aguilera. Madonna turned the tables on the first song by playing the groom, while Spears and Aguilera doubled as her brides, and at the end of the number, all three kissed. ANDREW HUSBAND

How to stretch summer-job money

ALL PHOTOS ISTOCK

NerdWallet is a personal finance website.

Toiling behind the ice cream counter or sweating on the lifeguard stand aren't just rites of passage for college students. You might need summer-job money to help cover the ever-rising cost of tuition, living expenses and textbooks, plus visits home.

Money earned from a summer gig may not seem like much, especially if you're working only seasonally. According to the most recent data on median wages from the Bureau of Labor Statistics, women ages 16 to 24 earn $206 a week for part-time work and $511 for full-time work. Men in the same age group earn $215 a week for part-time work and $528 working full time.

But even with lean earnings from just a few months, here's how you can set aside a portion of your pay and change your financial fortune.

Send money directly to savings

Your employer may give you the choice between getting paid by direct deposit or by payroll card, which works like a prepaid debit card.

"Always use direct deposit if you're given the option," says Amelia O'Rourke-Owens, program manager for the nonprofit America Saves for Young Workers, an initiative of the Consumer Federation of America, a consumer research and advocacy organization.

When you're paid by direct deposit, you'll generally have the option to split your paycheck into checking and savings accounts. You're more likely to save money you've earned if some of it never hits checking at all.

Consider sending 20% of your paycheck to savings to start. Make sure you have enough money in the checking account for regular expenses first; you can always save more.

Invest in your future

You won't regret saving a portion of your summer income for the long term. You won't be able to spend it right away, but it will last long past graduation day.

Say you open a retirement account like a Roth IRA with $50 when you're 20 years old and put $50 in it every month. At 70, you would have over $175,000. Increase your contribution to $100 a month in two years, and you would end up with almost $330,000.

A Roth IRA in particular is a good idea because you can withdraw money you've put into it at any time without penalty. So it can function as a backup emergency fund.

Another way to plan for your future: Put a deposit on a secured credit card. Your deposit — say, $200 — will generally be equal to your credit line. That will help you safely build credit, which could mean lower interest rates on a car loan and an easier time getting an apartment in the future.

Pick the right bank account

A checking account with lots of fees will needlessly eat into your earnings.

You might be tempted to choose the bank your parents use, but shop around. Make sure you understand minimum balance requirements and monthly maintenance, ATM and overdraft fees.

While some banks waive fees if your paycheck is deposited directly into an account each month, that won't help college students who work only part of the year, O'Rourke-Owens says.

Several online banks and credit unions offer free or low-fee checking accounts. Prioritize one that will reimburse ATM charges or has a wide ATM network, and that has low overdraft fees. The Consumer Financial Protection Bureau's website offers a guide to managing your checking account.

Done right, your summer job can lead to new friends, pizza money, a line on a résumé — and a step toward long-term financial security.

OPINION

DANNY PICARD

Listen to "The Danny Picard Show" at dannypicard.com. Follow him on Twitter @dannypicard

Part of the responsibility of this job is admitting when you're wrong. So, here you go. I was wrong about J.D. Martinez.

In fairness though, so was the rest of Major League Baseball.

Martinez, who turns 31 later this month, signed a five-year, $110 million deal with the Boston Red Sox in late February. This came several months after his agent, Scott Boras, had told teams that Martinez wanted a contract in the $200 million range.

If you looked at Martinez' numbers over his previous four seasons, especially last year when he hit 45 home runs and had 104 RBI with a .303 average and a 1.066 OPS, you wouldn't have thought an asking price of $200 million was too crazy. Needless to say, nobody wanted to pay him that kind of money.

Could it have been the Boras effect? Or maybe teams were saving up for the following winter, when players like Bryce Harper and Manny Machado would be free agents? Perhaps many didn't believe Martinez would keep hitting 40 home runs into his 30's? How about all of the above?

Whatever the reason, nobody in Major League Baseball was willing to give Martinez a $200 million deal. That's just a fact.

So the Red Sox waited it out, and Martinez accepted $110 million in the early stages of spring training workouts. There were several player opt-outs added to the deal in order to allow Martinez the possibility of trying to get a larger contract in the very near future, but it came out to $110 million nonetheless. And as it turns out, it's been an absolute steal for the Red Sox.

At the time, I questioned the signing. While I did acknowledge that Martinez would obviously be an upgrade for the Red Sox if he could continue to be a 40-home run guy, I couldn't get over the fact that nobody else wanted him. And seeing what Martinez is doing this season, it's even more confusing as to why teams were seemingly scared to give him a big-money deal.

Entering Wednesday, Martinez leads the Majors in home runs with 37, and RBI with 104. And there's still a month-and-a-half left in the regular season.

If he keeps it up, we're probably looking at a 50-home run year for Martinez, and quite possibly the AL MVP award. Not bad for a guy that nobody wanted in the winter. Which, again, is the only thing I actually questioned at the time of the signing. As in, "What does all of baseball know about him, that we don't?" Because it's not like the Red Sox were throwing $200 million at him, either.

Sure, Martinez' current average annual salary of $22 million looks like a huge bargain. And many praised Dave Dombrowski last winter for "not bidding against himself," which is always a wise decision. But what if another team decided to offer him $25 million a year? Would the Red Sox have called Boras and offered $28 million per? Would Dombrowski have ever entered a bidding war for Martinez' services? I guess we'll never know.

Seeing Martinez crush the ball consistently all season long, you would think that, yeah, Dombrowski would've and should've offered him $30 million a season if he ended up having to. But considering the final offer was nearly $100 million less than what the player wanted, I'm not convinced Dombrowski would've.

It's one thing to not bid against yourself. It's another thing to make an offer that's so easily matchable around the league, given the numbers Martinez had been putting up. Which brings me back to my initial question back in February: Would Martinez be in Boston had somebody else, anybody else, actually wanted him at the price he was asking for?

He wanted $200 million. He got $110 million. Right now, he's probably worth $300 million.

So, yeah, I got this one wrong. But so did the rest of Major League Baseball.

Aries You can spin things in your favor if you think matters through and execute your plans with precision. A celebration will encourage you to spend more time with a loved one.

Taurus If you want to make a difference, go about it the right way. Put more muscle into your work instead of talking a lot and expecting others to do the labor.

Gemini Changes at home will improve your relationship with a loved one. Altering your lifestyle and sharing your feelings will open a window of opportunity that you didn't expect.

Cancer Expand on one of your ideas and consider forming a partnership with someone who can help you advance your interests. Don't let an individual with a negative attitude stand in your way.

Leo Get together with old friends or colleagues but avoid any situations that could lead to indulgent behavior or involve someone who tends to be a bad influence.

Virgo Step outside your comfort zone and attend an event that can help you get ahead. Networking and signing up for courses will help you discover new interests and meet new people.

Libra Find a way to bring about positive change to your community or environment. Addressing issues of concern will help you understand the challenges involved and how to deal with them.

Scorpio Look for the good in everyone and learn through observation. Creative endeavors and making changes at home that suit your lifestyle are favored. Distance yourself from excessive individuals.

Sagittarius Take a break, visit a place you've never been or set up a meeting. A money matter should be resolved before you invest in something new.

Capricorn Talk to someone in an authoritative position and find out your best options. Taking care of contracts, money matters or health concerns will help eliminate stress and ease your mind.

Aquarius Put more effort into how you look and feel. Set up a routine that is geared toward a healthy lifestyle. Make plans to discuss your goals with a loved one.

Pisces Keep your emotions tucked away somewhere safe. You don't want to appear vulnerable if someone is trying to take advantage of you. Avoid joint ventures. You are better off doing your own thing.
